It began as a free program that was offered as part of the MDL Chemistry DB library. Within a short time, it had evolved into a standard format that was mandated by the IUPAC for the exchange of chemical data. In 1996, the formats of ISIS/Draw and ISIS/Draw 2.0 were combined into the IUPAC format under the name CDK ISIS/Draw. CDK ISIS/Draw is now known simply as ISIS. ISIS is written in the C programming language, using a parser that is based on the DTD standards. It supports drawing of chemical structures in both 2D and 3D space and is written in an object-oriented manner. ISIS is written to be modular so that it can be easily expanded or modified. ISIS is supported on Windows, UNIX, and Macintosh systems. It is free software and is distributed under the GPL. Since ISIS 1.2, the chemical equation editor has been derived from the original work of Benis and Murcko (J. Am. Chem. Soc. 110, 3377, 1988), which later became the basis of the ChemOffice and ChemDraw equation editor. Despite recent strides, the treatment of chronic heart failure is still complex and frequently difficult. In the aging population, heart failure constitutes a significant cause of morbidity and mortality. Chronic heart failure requires evaluation and treatment of multiple systems, including the cardiovascular system, the renal system, and the immune system, as well as a variety of drugs. Although many of the advances in managing heart failure have been due to the development of new therapies, the major changes have involved management of this chronic disease rather than the treatment of individual symptoms. Major new goals include controlling symptoms 82157476af
